

Helen of Troy

Helen of Troy is the most famous of all heroines in poetry and romance. The face that launched a thousand ships, she is preserved forever in myth and legend. But where did those myths originate? And why has she retained such a powerful presence over the centuries? In Helen of Troy Jack Lindsay uncovers the woman behind the legend. He examines how she was portrayed in ancient literature and art, and her mythological origins. It traces the steps by which she changes from the daemonic creature of Homer into the vanity-crazed coquette of Euripides. Out of the narrative comes not only the story of Helen in all her variety, but also a story about the essence of Greek culture. Was Helen a goddess who became a heroine, or was she an historical person who drew multiple meanings from myth into herself as she became the symbol of men's deepest desire? Helen of Troy is a fascinating, in-depth study of one of history's most legendary figures. Jack Lindsay (1900-90) was the son of a well-known Australian artist, Norman Lindsay. He took first class honours in Latin and Greek at Queensland University, and came to England in 1926, where he worked as a translator, editor and novelist. He is the author of The Normans and Their World, Leisure and pleasure in Roman Egypt, Last days with Cleopatra and The Ancient World.
